What is a torrent? A torrent is basically a file. In this case, it's a movie file. However, unlike your standard movie file, a torrent file isn't trying to play the movie itself – it's actually trying to tell your computer how to download the actual movie from other people online. This method of downloading large files from other people called "peer-to-peer" (P2P) and it's a big part of what makes BitTorrent sites like TorrentsTime legal (at least for now). It's also why there's such a big stigma around using torrents online. What Are BitTorrent Sites? BitTorrent sites are essentially the site where you're going to find torrent files for your favorite movies and TV shows. You can think of them like YouTube in that they host this content and let anyone upload and download it, but they aren't in charge of actually creating it. These sites often change, since they can get shut down by the government when they start sharing pirated content. However, the spirit behind them is always alive and well! The king of these sites right now is Torrentz, though we've also had good experiences with Kickass Torrents in the past. Where Do I Find Torrents? Before you can download anything, you need to know where to find the torrent files. Unfortunately, most of the time, people think these sites are illegal because they're looking for torrent downloads out in the dark web. However, since these sites are also banned by ISPs and denied by most web browsers, this is simply not true. You'll find most of your favorite movies on your favorite torrent site with just a little bit of work! Visit one of these sites and search for your movie title. Keep in mind that they may not be up at all times – often, pirated movies are only available for a short amount of time before they're taken down again. If this happens, try the next biggest torrent site and see if you have more luck there. Torrents Are Not Always Legal We just told you that movies on torrent sites are okay since they're technically legal, but we need to clarify what we mean by "legal." Since these sites "host" illegal content and allow users to download it, they themselves aren't legal. However, the actual users of these sites aren't doing anything wrong – as long as you're not uploading any content or downloading anything protected by copyright (like a movie still in theaters). Despite their legal status, however, for most people torrents aren't worth it.
